

Miles Berry Biography

Raised in Mandeville, Louisiana, saxophonist Miles Berry started his musical studies at the age of 12. He began study in Jazz at the New Orleans Center for Creative Arts in 2009, where he is now a Level IV student.

As a resident of Mandeville, Miles travels a little over 70 miles a day to attend this prestigious high school conservatory in New Orleans. Although Miles wasn't born into a musical family, he has their full support to pursue a Jazz career. His mother Lin is a former school teacher and his father Bret owns and manages a heart clinic.

On April 30, 2012, Miles was selected to perform alongside Herbie Hancock to celebrate the first ever International Jazz Day. By his senior year in high school, Berry has played with musicians such as Herbie Hancock, the Marsalis family and many more. What the future has in store for Miles is unknown, but what is known is that he will always be perfecting and expanding his art form along with spreading the good vibrations he has to share.